

It's my birthday, happy birthday to me, I pray to fulfill dreams and change lives before I leave this planet earth.

My mom always rings a phrase in my ear, and I pray God gives me the grace to heed till the end. Not only my mom rings this phrase, I also hear it from many other people. You might have been eager to hear the phrase I am talking about right now.

Life is full of ups and down. On a race track, we all start on the same line, and then, we start running, running, and running, some will fall off the track, some will run but won't have the energy to complete the race, some will run till almost the end of the race and relent, some will finish the race, but will finish earlier than the others. So Definitely not everyone will receive the award, only few will and some will have bigger awards than the others.

What am I trying to say? The race track is life.

Those that will start on the same line are your birth mates, those you met in your early days in life.

Some will fall off the track, some of your little friends died when you were young.

Some will run but won't have the energy to complete the race, some of your primary school friends you started together will not make it together with you to the secondary school.

Some will run till almost the end of the race and relent, some of those who made it together with you to the secondary school will push to the end, but won't make it up with you to the university.

Some will finish the race, but will finish earlier than the others, Not all of you who started university will graduate at the same time, due to life circumstances.

Not everyone will receive the award, not everyone who graduates from the university is sure of getting a job or making it independently.

Some will have bigger awards than the others, the award is what you get paid. Not everyone will make it big so quick. Your income will be greater than that of some people, and some other people's income will surely be larger than yours.

Take advantage of anywhere life puts you positively and never look at another person's success time, in order for you not to spend lesser time than God's destined for you. You will be great, never relent, never stop working towards achieving your goals and like my anthem: Always pray to your God.

Most importantly the phrase you have been eager to hear is "WAIT FOR YOUR TIME". Thanks for waiting enough to read this to the end.

You are amazing
